PREFACE

——————" There studious let me sit,
" And hold high converse with the Mighty Dead,
" Sages of antient time, as Gods rever'd,
" As Gods beneficent, who blest mankind
" With arts, with arms, and humaniz'd a world."

THOMSON'S "WINTER."

THE establishment of a Public Library in Victoria, supported by the State, and stamped with the characteristics of a National Institution, was made the subject of early consideration by our first governor, Mr. Latrobe.

Fully impressed with the importance of the influence likely to arise from voluntary adult mental improvement, as well as of the intellectual and moral elevation to be created by a cultivation of the works of standard authors, he placed upon the Estimates of the year 1853, a sum of three thousand pounds (£3,000) for the purchase of books, and ten thousand pounds (£10,000) towards the erection of a suitable building to contain them.

These sums were cheerfully voted by Parliament; and, recognising and approving the liberality of sentiment which originated the design, two further sums, equal in amount, were in the ensuing year generously provided for the like purposes.

In the year 1853, Five Trustees were appointed and possession of a portion of land, comprising nearly two acres, conveniently situated near the centre of the town, was given to them as a site for the building, the foundation-stone of which was laid by Sir Charles Hotham (our second governor), on the 3rd of July, 1854, the same day as that upon which was laid the first stone of the University of Melbourne.

The expense attending building operations, and the interruptions and delays by which they were attended at that period of our history, retarded the completion of the work, consequently it was not until the 11th of February, 1856, that the Trustees were enabled to invite Major-General Macarthur, (who then administered the government) to throw the Library open to the Public.

At that period the centre portion alone was completed. It contained only 3,846 volumes.

Many circumstances upon which it is not necessary to dilate, suggested to the Trustees that it would be advisable to adopt a greater freedom of ingress and liberality of access to the books than is usual elsewhere. Accordingly admission without payment or the necessity for letter of introduction or authorisation (which latter proves, in many instances, a mere obstructive formality) was granted to all persons above the age of fourteen years, whether residents or strangers.

All arbitrary restrictions on free reference to the books were removed, as well as those restraints which in some libraries operate only as impediments to the students, without ensuring corresponding advantages or the expected security, the enforcement of which requires, moreover, a larger staff of attendants than the Trustees had at their command.

Attention to the ordinary courtesies of life was all that was suggested, and it was hoped that by reposing in the visitors an honorable confidence a taste for study might be awakened in some and encouraged in all, while a new interest might arise tending to a better protection and preservation of the property, than if the use of it were fenced round by a multitude of prohibitory regulations.

The success of these measures was so decided as to justify a further extension of the hours of admission, and the attendance of readers increased so considerably as to call for additional accommodation.

An appeal, addressed by the Trustees on behalf of the Public, to Her Majesty's Government, in the year 1858, met with a favorable reception; and the discreet liberality of the Legislature placed the sum of twenty thousand pounds (£20,000) at the disposal of the Trustees to enable them to enlarge the building.

That sum was expended by them in erecting a wing in which is a reading-room,—opened by Sir Henry Barkly, our present governor, on the 24th of May, 1859,—and a chamber for the reception of works of art, also opened by him on the 24th May, 1861.

The building at present erected forms only a portion of the western side of the general design.

It contains an Entrance Hall, measuring 50 feet square; Fine Arts room, 55 by 50; Trustees' room and attendants' quarters on the ground floor, and a temporary staircase leading to the library, which occupies the first floor. On this are two reading rooms en suite—the first 50 by 50, and 34 feet high; the second (the Queen's room), 95 by 50, and 34 feet high; giving a chamber of 145 feet in length.

A gallery runs round each side, supported by cross walls running at right angles to the main walls, connected with columns, which stand at a distance of 13 feet from the latter. These run up to and carry the roof; thus leaving a clear space of 24 feet for a row of tables up the centre. Under the gallery, in the intercolumnal recesses, the bookcases are placed, back to back, behind the columns; thus dividing the whole length of the Queen's Room into twelve open apartments.

The distribution of the books on the first floor is shown on the block plan in the Appendix. Each recess is capable of containing two thousand volumes, and the classification, made under the direction of the Librarian, Mr. Tulk, has proved alike convenient to the public and to the individual student, by conducting the latter to the subject of his study, and by diffusing the former through the rooms.

The resources of the Library on any subject may be thus discovered at a glance, and the wants and desires of all, being ascertained, provision can be made to meet the demands of any particular section of visitors, while the flexibility of the system will admit of the expansion of the arrangement without any material disturbance of the general plan.

In the galleries the books are arranged against the exterior walls; and here are found the works presented by the Honorable the Commissioners of Patents, 2,020 volumes; a collection of about 3,000 volumes of works of law, statistics, political history, and economy; and also a collection of about 1,200 volumes treating of medical and surgical subjects. To these departments, readers and professional students are admitted by tickets, obtained from the Librarian.

Light is admitted in the outer chamber by windows in front, nine feet by four feet, and in the Queen's Room by windows of equal dimensions, in front and rear, one in each compartment, as well as by cupolas in the roof of each room, and horizontal windows deeply sunk in pannels in the galleries.

In addition to the air occasionally introduced through the windows, ventilation is secured by open spaces being left over every bookcase, communicating with flues carried through the main walls; also by air tubes leading from the base of the columns to the roof.

The rooms will accommodate about three hundred and fifty readers, as follows:—

The centre table	10
The long tables	40
The tables in recesses ...	100
Side and other tables ...	100
Gallery tables	100
	350

There are seven hundred and sixty (760) feet run of bookcases, or six thousand four hundred (6,400) feet run of shelving; and, calculating that on an average one foot will hold five books, the present Library will contain thirty-two thousand (32,000) volumes.

The general tone of the painting is a light cream color for the lower parts, and a tender light blue for the ceiling; the whole agreeably broken up by a judicious introduction of gilding and ornaments of Etruscan red, blue and white. The relievo ornaments, such as enriched moulding guilloches, &c., are picked with color and touched with gold.

The walls of the building are principally constructed of basalt (blue stone); the front faced with freestone from Kangaroo Point, Tasmania. It is carried out in the Corinthian style of architecture, the columns and pilasters standing in stylobate, and surmounted by a parapet, partly of moulded panelling, and partly of ballusters; the total height, from the ground to the top of the parapet, being fifty-two feet.*

The Fine Art Room, on the ground floor, measures 55 feet by 50; the walls, which are without architectural features have (as an experiment,) been painted of a delicate light purplish grey, and have been divided into pannels by lines and ornamental corners of a darker tint of the same colors. The ceiling is divided into deep panels of a light grey color, the beams of a stone color; the whole is decorated with Greek ornament, of the leaf and scroll pattern. The room is ventilated by flues in the walls, carried up to the top of the building. It is worthy of remark that the tint adopted for the walls gives a pleasing tone and a roundness and animation to the casts.

The nature of the Studies pursued by the Readers may be judged of by an inspection of the Catalogue It shows that the Works ordered by the Trustees form a solid body of useful and instructive Literature. And also that the public of Victoria is indebted to the generosity of several contributors for many valuable and acceptable donations.

In the decorated Initials and Finals, Mr. Edward Latrobe Bateman has introduced a selection from the flora of the country—the first of the kind published. These display a graceful arrangement combined with fidelity of delineation and excellence of execution which commend them alike to the botanist and the lover of art.

The degree in which the Library is appreciated is exemplified by the fact that within 11 months of this year, it was visited by 161,221 Readers; and within the 5 months succeeding its opening, 26,003 persons visited the Museum of Art.

Within Six years the Building has been advanced to the extent already described. The Collection of Books amounts to 26,723. The aggregate number of Visitors during the period has been 595,143; while the actual loss to the property by abstraction of or wilful injury to the Books, does not reach in money value £7.

Books have been circulated in the Municipal Districts, within ten miles of Melbourne, namely,

	Population.
Collingwood	21,397
Prahran	8,165
St. Kilda	4,763
Brighton	2,721

A loan of from 200 to 400 volumes (duplicates of those in the Library) for a period of three months, is made to the Mechanics' and Literary Institutes of these towns; when sent back a re-issue of a similar number for a like period occurs. The books have hitherto been returned with regularity and with a complete fulfilment of the conditions of the loan. It was the design of the Trustees to have extended the circulation throughout the country; however, they have not yet been empowered so to do.

The Institution may now therefore be considered as established in the wishes and affections of the people of Victoria.
